Notice: MPIC Election

The annual election of MPIC Officers and Directors will be held on Thursday evening, June 22 at a general meeting at the Clubhouse. An entertaining event is in planning to enliven the proceedings, and the candidates and hours of voting will be published in next month's newsletter. On Thursday, May 18, from 7:30 to 8:00 pm, nominations from the floor will be accepted by an MPIC Director at the Clubhouse.

Ray "Bones" Bandar - Miraloma Park's Legendary Skull Collector Extraordinaire

By Robert Gee

Ray "Bones" Bandar proudly wearing his California Academy of Science jacket and his bone necktie.

In Miraloma Park there's a collection of almost 7000 skulls and skeletons. However, it's not buried underground, but instead proudly housed in the "Bone Palace" at Ray Bandar's house.

The collection is jaw dropping. In his basement, the skulls are stacked from floor to ceiling. Skulls line every shelf, hang on every wall and stacked on tables. The skulls are grinning at you from all around! Everything is meticulously catalogued and organized by over 650 species such as seals, sea lions, dolphins, cheetahs, leopards, jaguars, horses and reptiles. Outside of his basement, every room in his house is crammed with bones and skulls from animals Ray has collected. In his living room floor is an elephant's pelvis. Even his bathtub has huge caribou antlers sitting in it.

Ray, 89, and his wife of 63 years, Alkmene, have lived in Miraloma Park since 1964. Ray is a retired biologist. Both he and his wife are also artists. Though he can't quite Over $68,000 to Miraloma Park's Resiliency Initiatives!

MPIC Resilient Miraloma Park Committee

In 2014, The Miraloma Park Improvement Club (MPIC) partnered with the City's Neighborhood Empowerment Network to launch "Resilient Miraloma Park". The goal of this initiative is make our community as connected and prepared as possible so that during times of stress our neighbors, especially the most vulnerable, will be safe and have minimal impact in their health and wellbeing. Over the course of the last three years, hundreds of Miralomans have participated in planning workshops, training and community activities which are all tied back to our Resilience Action Plan. In addition to over $4,600 in funds directly from MPIC, the Resilient Miraloma Park working group has also been to applying for grants through Supervisor Norman Yee's Annual Participatory Budgeting process. This year we had our most successful year to date with a total of $43,000.00 in grants awarded, bringing our total to over $68,000.00 in the last two years. The projects funded by these grants include:

move around like he used to, his mind is as sharp as ever. He shared many stories and pictures with me going back to the 1950s! While he was talking, the twinkle in his eyes showed excitement in his love for the study of bones.

Ray’s interest first started with reptiles while in middle and high school where he was known as “Reptile Ray”. It was then when he first donated specimens to the California Academy of Science (the Academy). He collected his first skull, a harbor seal, in 1953 at Ocean Beach.

In 1956 Ray was hired by the Academy and for almost 60 years until 2013 he did field work collecting skulls and bones of dead animals under special permits on behalf of the Academy. For every skull, he recorded vital statistics such as species, sex, age and probable causes of death. At the Academy, he was sent on scientific expeditions to collect insects, reptiles and mammals in the Sea of Cortez, Mexico, Alaska, and Australia. He’s also collected bones from exotic creatures from the SF and Oakland zoos. Ray is particularly proud of a new beetle he discovered that was named after him: Inyodectes bandarari.

Ray has spent most of his life searching California beaches for dead seals and sea lions. Officials would call Ray when a carcass washes up on the beach. He would first remove the skull, which he’s authorized to do with a special permit from the State on behalf of the Academy. After removing the skull from the animal, he would then clean it by removing as much flesh as possible, then putting the skull in a bucket of water and in a warm spot, let it sit there for weeks and bacterial action removes all the organic material. It is a natural maceration process that smells really bad.

When he wasn’t collecting skulls and bones, he taught biology, human anatomy and physiology for 32 years at Oakland’s Fremont High School.

Hundreds of skulls from his collection are housed at the Academy where he has hosted displays. In 2014, there was a special exhibition at the Academy featuring more than 400 of his sea lion skulls. Ray has the largest collection of sea lion skulls in the world. In April of this year, he had a special exhibit of skulls at the Academy called “Rare Marine Reptiles from SF Bay Area.”

Ray said he collects so many bones because he looks at bones as masterpieces of sculpture. “The structural engineering of a skull serves as a blue print, and like a book, can be read to understand the lifestyle of different animals.” Ray collects so many skulls of the same species because “In some, the differences in size and structure between male and female are so striking that they appear to be different species. Throughout the life of an animal, the skull continuously changes in proportions and appearance from newborn to geriatric. The more skulls, the more individual variations.”

You can imagine that removing a skull from a dead carcass washed up on the beach can get pretty messy as well as draw a lot of attention. Ray relishes telling a story about how he was working on a dead elephant seal carcass in Half Moon Bay in front of the Ritz Carlton. As he’s working away on removing the skull, he turns around and 3 police officers are yelling at him thinking he was homeless or deranged and trying to eat the seal! And then there were the accusations he was going to sell the body parts on EBay.

Ray’s extreme exploits in bone collecting have been profiled in many different media such as the Washington Post, KGO TV, KQED TV, National Geographic TV, NPR, Bay Area Back Roads, Los Angeles Times, San Jose Mercury News, and the SF Chronicle.

The 7000 skulls in his basement will eventually go to the Academy where his work will comprise one-fifth of the museum’s ornithology and mammalogy collection. “Ray Bandar is an extraordinary friend to the California Academy of Sciences,” says Meg Lowman, chief of science and sustainability at the Academy. “The skulls and skeletons Ray has collected will help make the world a better place through their applications to research, exhibits and education activities at the Academy and beyond.”

We’re very appreciative of the Supervisor’s support of this program and eager to get more information to our neighbors about how to participate in these programs and projects. Stay tuned. In the meantime, be sure to visit our website at www.resilientmiralomapark.org.

President’s Update

Bill Kan

There is always something going on in Miraloma Park. Since the last update, there have been several activities to inform, beautify, educate, make safe, prepare, and entertain Miraloma Park.

Did you know that SF Recology is applying to raise rates in San Francisco? Guest speakers, Rosie Dilger of Rate Payer Advocate SF and Ray Walton of SF Recology, spoke at the April MPIC meeting about the proposed increase to be effective July 1, 2017. With San Francisco’s zero waste goals, the reason for the rate increases include improvements for infrastructure improvements for recycling and composting facilities, labor, new 15-year landfill agreement, and new and enhanced collection services. The expected increase is 16.4% or about $5.70 per month for an average single family home. The proposed increase would be 4.98% in year 2, 0.0% in year 3, and 0.62% in year 4. Actual household increases may differ. One question that came up during discussion was about rates for households that generate very little waste. In these situations, we were told that they should discuss their situation with Recology.

You are always welcome to attend the monthly MPIC meetings. On June 1, the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission (SFPUC) will speak about changes to our tap water, which is now a blend of ground water and water from Hetch Hetchy. The discussion with Kevin Guy, Director of the City’s Office of Short Term Rentals, originally scheduled for May 4, has been rescheduled to the August 3. MPIC Board meetings are held at 7pm on the first Thursday of every month (except July) at the MPIC Clubhouse, 350 O’Shaughnessy.

There are two new efforts to make Miraloma Park an even more pleasant place to live. The MPIC recently sent a letter of support for the Miraloma Park Southern Gateway Project. This Project is seeking a Challenge Grant from the City to beautify the steps on Bella Vista Way that lead up to the baseball field and school. If approved, the grant will provide funding for an installation of public art in our neighborhood. Working with noted artists, Aileen Barr and Collette Crutcher, students from Miraloma Elementary will help design and fabricate a beautiful mosaic mural.

The O'Shaughnessy Hollow cleanup on April 1 had a great turnout. In case you are wondering, the Hollow is the open area on Marietta Drive with great views of Glen Canyon. Thanks to Bryan Forman and his neighbors on Marietta for coordinating the event with SF Parks and Recreation, the Police Department and the Adopt-A-Street program. About 30 adults and kids joined the cleanup with lots of coffee and donuts. In addition to helping, it was great way for me to meet and learn about how our neighborhood has evolved from some neighbors that grew up and returned to Miraloma Park.

Removing a needle found at the O'Shaughnessy Hollow cleanup day.

Congratulations, Miraloma Park residents! Your votes in the District 7 Participatory Budget process greatly helped to improve the quality of life in Miraloma Park. All four projects related to Miraloma Park will get funded. Two are traffic calming measures for speed humps on Myra Way and Melrose Avenue. One is "One Block at a Time," a part of our community's ongoing disaster preparedness program. One is Miraloma Park Community Connector, a "community center without walls" to provide neighbor-to-neighbor assistance and respite in the aftermath of a major disaster.

And many thanks to all who participated in the NEED HELP/OK sign drill last month. It was our way to commemorate the Great San Francisco Earthquake of 1906. More importantly, it is our way of preparing for the next big earthquake or other disaster. The signs will help first responders identify and attend to households that need assistance.

The annual elections for the MPIC Board will be held on June 22nd at the MPIC Clubhouse. We are excited to May 2017 Miraloma Life Page 4 have on the ballot for the MPIC Board Bryan Forman and Reza Vagefi. Bryan has been a long-time Miraloma Park resident and is very active in the safety improvements for and beautification of O'Shaughnessy Hollow. Reza Vagefi is one of our newer residents and was successful in obtaining funding of his proposal for traffic calming on Myra Way.

Many neighbors have expressed their interest and concerns about crime and safety in Miraloma Park. Last month's article on the Juanita Way Safety meeting highlighted a great example of things that MPIC can do to assist our residents. To stay informed, social media resources such as NextDoor is very popular. Another great resource for local activity is the newsletter from our local police station. You can get regular updates online or emailed to you at www.inglesidepolicestation.com/newsletter.

MPIC Safety Committee Update

What could a portable toilet and dumpster sitting in front of a house mean to potential burglars? It could mean that the house is under renovation and vacant. Thieves target such houses to steal expensive construction equipment or appliances. Many of the burglaries reported in Miraloma Park in the past have involved vacant houses under renovation. Thieves would back up their trucks in the early am or late evening, bust open the garage and take the equipment. Some thieves are even bold enough to come back for a second bite the same day or shortly thereafter. Some contractors have caught such thieves in the act. To prevent such burglaries, be sure you and your contractors properly secure the house under construction and if there is an alarm, use it. Be sure to have the front and side entrances of the house well-lit and inform your neighbors of who the contractors are and when they are usually coming and going. Ask your neighbors to immediately call the police if they see suspicious individuals at the property during unusual hours.

Miraloma Park Earthquake Drill is More than OK

Guido van Rijn

Thanks to those of you that participated in the NEED HELP/OK April Drill in remembrance of the 1906 earthquake. KEEP your sign. October is the anniversary month of the 1989 earthquake. Repeating this DRILL will help bring about the need to be more aware of a possible major earthquake or other disaster. Besides its kind of fun to look around and see if other neighbors participated. So please save those signs and place them where you can find them easily when you need them.

Shopping for Spring – The Zero Waste Way

Catherine Homsey

Ah, spring!

Time to start thinking about warmer weather and summer plans. We also start thinking about summery clothes. Once upon a time, I would get inspired by the change in the weather and impulsively buy whatever looked cute or stylish for spring, then go home and stuff it into my already packed closet. I had so many clothes – but nothing to wear! I sometimes spent 10 minutes staring at my closet in the morning, trying to decide what to put on. The minutes would tick by as I would pull out pieces I had never or rarely worn, trying once again to make them work as part of an outfit. Then I would look at the clock, panic at the thought of being late, and grab a tried and true combination that I knew worked for me. The 80/20 rule certainly applied – I usually wore only about 20% of my clothes while 80% collected dust.

Things certainly have changed since then. I have gotten rid of the 80% of clothes I didn't wear and only kept the 20% I use. Getting dressed has never been easier! Last month, we talked about spring cleaning and reducing your wardrobe to keep only the things you truly love. Maybe you've been able to tackle this project already; maybe you are still working on it. Either way, once you reduce your closet to only the essentials, you will probably want a few updates for spring and summer.

Wait a minute! I thought the point was to reduce my wardrobe, you say? Well, yes, but you can have it both ways if you are disciplined. If you reduced your closet and got rid of the things you don't love, you probably learned a lot about what you really like and what truly flatters you. You probably also have a lot less clothing and a much better idea of what you need. When you shop from now on, don't be impulsive, like I once was. Really think about each purchase. Do you really love it? Or is it just ok? Does it flatter you? Or is it just the latest trend that others are wearing? Do you need it? Or are you just looking to buy something? Never spend your money on “just ok” or something that doesn’t flatter you. If you’re not sure, walk away and wait a couple of days. If you still want it, go back and get it. If you have forgotten about it, that’s the sign it wasn’t for you.

Shopping for Spring

So, you’re ready to shop thoughtfully, but how do you reduce waste when shopping for clothes? This one is easy: buy used! Clothing is one of the most wasteful items we purchase. Making new clothes requires massive amounts of energy and resources. Natural fibers need lots of water, land, pesticides and fertilizers. Synthetic fibers are made from oil and so are clothing dyes. Once the clothing is made, it is packaged and shipped, often with a separate plastic bag for each item and then lots of oil and gas to get it to stores or to your home. Once you buy it and no longer need it, it either ends up in the landfill or donated. But we donate so many clothes each year, we can’t even resell them all – most is shipped to other countries!

Buying second hand is an excellent way to conserve resources and to save money! We are fortunate to live in an area with countless options to buy used clothing. There are thrift stores, consignment stores, eBay, Craigslist, clothing swaps, etc. I have been able to find everything my family needs at second hand stores within 10 minutes of our neighborhood. Not only that, we can buy premium brand clothing, barely worn, for a mere fraction of the price it would cost to buy new! Occasionally, we do need a specialty item that is hard to find locally (last season it was snow pants in the right size), and that is when I go to eBay to look for it. I just make sure to click the box that says “used” and ask the seller to ship in paper or cardboard rather than plastic.

Buying used also has helped me with that impulse shopping problem I mentioned. When I need something specific, I sometimes don’t find exactly what I want right away. But, I always find it. That has taught me patience and has shown me I don’t really need most things right now most of the time. I feel so much more content now that I know that buying stuff does not give me anything I didn’t have before. I already have everything I need.

Patience paid off: second hand Ties for a bargain basement price!

District 7 2017 Participatory Budgeting Winning Projects

Supervisor Norman Yee’s Office

On April 18 2017, Supervisor Norman Yee announced the winning projects from his District 7 Participatory Budgeting Program. He said it was a record setting year with more than 2,400 District 7 residents casting more than 17,800 votes!! This year’s list of winners are listed below. The Supervisor’s office is currently connecting the applicants to project managers in the various city departments that will facilitate the process of implementation. Thank you everyone for voting and making the program a record setting year all around- from the number of proposals submitted, to the incredibly active Neighborhood Council, to the tremendous amount of community outreach and number of residents voting on the proposals.

Ed's Note: Bud Wilson (1923-2009) was a great West of Twin Peaks community advocate and a veteran of three wars, including service as a never-shot-down and highly decorated World War II fighter pilot.

No one who'd met you would likely forget you.
Vigorous in age, young you'd have been like a small, alert bird, bantam unfazed by the big ones.
You were a big small man, and this bird was proud to share a branch with you, colonel without airs.

A good part Cherokee, you grew up in the South,
a Carolina backwoods boy but no bumpkin.
Of so many things you knew, this city kid had no clue:
hunting, fishing, riding, the whole country lot.

And hounds—you loved to watch ours wrestle,
even though mine won: "She's got his number,"
you'd chuckle as she toppled your fat old shepherd, put him down and held him on the ground.

You'd owned an antique shop years before we met and still loved temperamental old clocks.
For hours spent with them, hiding from your wife,
you tinkered and muttered—coached, cajoled,
nudged, pleaded for them to run right.
I never heard it, but I'll bet they talked back.
Sometimes I sat too in your time-drenched lair, talking about city politics, for we shared minor roles as neighborhood activists.
You were above all a decent man: an innate sense of fairness backlit your every effort.

Ode to Colonel Bud

Once, amid the choral ticking, you spoke of your wartime stint as a supply pilot, the misery of those Chinese who survived Japan's invasion only to starve and freeze. "The most pitiful sight I've ever seen" you said, shaking your head. "Those poor bastards had nothing, less than nothing—it was all gone." The same empathy drove your civic life: a need to help the powerless beat the power brokers, to look out for your neighbors and make sure they got fair treatment from bureaucrats and yes-men.

You didn't speak of your combat duties in the war—I think from a certain delicacy toward the dead and regret at having no choice but to kill them. Like many men who've never been in battle I had and have a nagging curiosity on that score. What did you do? What was it like? How did it feel I itched to ask you—like an insufferable TV reporter bullying for comment a man who'd lost his wife—to shoot men from the sky or bomb them into earth? Like spearing cocktail onions as they slip and slide? I couldn't ask: your dignity forbid, and my shame.

You did speak of flying—as if it were a sacrament: "There's nothing like it, believe me: climbing straight up, bursting from clouds into fiery blue!" Once you'd grown too deaf to qualify as pilot, your thoughts took flight, co-piloted by your clocks and you spent time fighting city hall and playing golf.

You told some tales of humor in the war—smuggling to your general good booze bought cheap in Asia. He paid with cash or sometimes a case or two, and you could win more, or lose it all, at poker. You'd been around, knew the chicanery of politics and government, the perks and tricks of command, but that did not erode your hope and persistence: for an ethical cause, you got up on your hind legs and fought like hell, to try and make them do it right.

You had a quick and sure grasp of when someone was not on the level. But if you thought they were, you'd back them to the hilt, and were not afraid to admit, if they betrayed our trust, that you'd backed the wrong horse. Running for Supervisor, you rode yourself hard but, not even placing, conceded in the end that maybe the winner would do the job as well.

Your blood, always quick to rise, and a lifetime's coffin nails, at last overwhelmed aging arteries: aortic dissection, and the next day you checked out. At the funeral home, the rouged face and dress uniform mocked your vitality: cosmetics couldn't capture your depth.

Alive, you were larger than life; dead, small as your body.

There is no way to soften the hard fact of your loss. An energy has left the scene, and our hilly corner of the city seems flatter, colder. A decade has passed since you went, but the wound is open, the gap still there. We've missed you, and Colonel Bud, we will always care.

Miraloma Park Residential Design Guidelines:

Adopted in 1999 by the SF Planning Commission to promote preservation of neighborhood character by encouraging residential design compatible with neighborhood setting, our neighborhood-specific Guidelines facilitate the process of permit application and Code-mandated design review and can prevent costly, time-consuming Discretionary Review proceedings.
